MAN OF MANY HOUSES — STANLEY ST. JOHN

by Conrad Ormsbee

Although I have watched East Montpelier evolve from a town almost exclusively devoted to agriculture to one with a much more rural residential flavor, I was awed as I spent an evening really talking with Stanley St. John. He is a man who has been a participant in that transformation.

Born in Ryegate, the third son of a dairy farm worker, Stanley came to town at the age of four when his father accepted employment at what is now the Christiansen farm. His family lived there until soon after the 1938 hurricane had wreaked its havoc on this area, when they moved to the Dr. Vincent farm just south of the present elementary school. Now in the Four Corners school district, Stanley settled into first grade only to watch the school house burn in February. (He has talked to EMES students this year about what that was like and about going to school in the Barclay, now King, house while a new school was being built.) The rest of his elementary school years were not quite as exciting, and he went on to graduate from Montpelier High School.

That was a time when people walked a lot more, even in rural areas, and, although Stanley found rides to high school most of the time, he walked to odd jobs and to work on farms. He also walked to the John Hall farm where Marjorie Holmes lived; this was the start of a courtship that led to their marriage in 1951.

After high school, Stanley worked at Delair's and then at the Cross Baking Company in Montpelier doing a variety of tasks, perhaps the most visible being driving a truck on delivery routes. Since much of the bakery job was night work, he started working part time for James Anderson. James and his brother George were East Montpelier carpenters who built and remodeled homes in this area, and Stanley was soon working with them full time.

In 1956, he found time to build the house that he and Marjorie still live in at the corner of Putnam and Dodge roads. He later started in business for himself, and for twelve years continued to build houses in this and surrounding towns. There are now more than a dozen houses in town that he either built or had a part in building, another dozen in nearby towns, and countless more that have been remodeled. Not to be overlooked is the large free-stall barn that he built at John Hall's, plus two more barns in other towns, as well as the Seventh Day Adventist church.

Stanley reached the point where he started looking for work that was less physically demanding, and he started working for the A.G. Anderson Concrete Co. in 1978 as a field supervisor. This took him to the sites of many large construction projects including one in Essex Junction where two large buildings were simultaneously being built for IBM. He supervised all the men on both foundations. After about eleven years in this field, he left to semi-retire, doing only those jobs that he wants to out of friendship or special interest. Among the latter is a large tree house that he was hired to build.

Over the years, the school system benefited from Stanley's interests and skills, starting with repairs to the one-room schools. He served for six years on the elementary school board at a very busy time during which the central school was planned and built, and served on a committee that evaluated prospective sites for what became U-32.

Marjorie and Stanley raised two sons and two daughters, all of whom are married with children, so there are a total of ten grandchildren. Families involve travel, and theirs is no exception. One son has lived in California and now is in

A longtime friend commented to me the other day that she used to know who lived in every house along her road, but now the old names had been replaced by new ones. This reflection started me thinking about our changing town, and I confess that it rather surprises me that there are still so many of those old families still living here. People working on the East Montpelier historical play to be staged in September as part of the year's sesquicentennial celebration are finding descendants of the earliest settlers of this town to play the parts of their ancestors. This is a remarkable tie with the past which we celebrate.

How is our community different for having such a generous mix of Clarks, Coburns, Morses, Cutlers, Bancrofts, Dudleys, Sibleys and other early families, along with the many newcomers and "middle comers"?

"Community" is a word we use a lot these days and well we should. It is the "glue" which binds people into a working group with common interests and common goals. Another thing a community must share is a common history, an institutional memory that shows us where we came from. And that is the special role of those long time families whose stories go way back in the history of this town. Without this vibrant awareness of our history, we can have no real community.

We are indeed fortunate to have a growing East Montpelier Historical Society, a superb town history, and great mix of older and newer residents to join in celebrating this historic year. It is my hope that all of us will share this celebration.

Mississippi. One daughter lives in Montpelier, the other in New Hampshire. Stanley and Marjorie have traveled extensively; in the last few years they have visited all of the states except Alaska, and it is in future plans.

Their other son lives in Chittenden County and works for a concrete construction company. This writer wonders whether it was watching men repair the hurricane damaged roof on the Christiansen barn or maybe watching others build a new Four Corners schoolhouse that started Stanley, and in turn his son, towards careers in construction.

Conrad Ormsbee lives on Center Road with his wife Anne. With the exception of service time during the Korean War and a year after he and Anne were married, he has lived all his life in East Montpelier.

JOIN YOUR FRIENDS ON RALLY DAY SEPTEMBER 11, 1999

If you haven't been to Rally Day in a couple of years, mark your calendar for Saturday, September 11th and come share in the fun with your neighbors and friends.

You can start off the morning with a running race; this is for young and old alike. This year we will be having a craft show/farmers' market out on the lawn featuring East Montpelier's crafters and farmers.

Maybe you'll want to sell your excess garden bounty! We will have music in the afternoon to help inspire your artistic abilities during the art workshop. Or bring along your lawn chair to listen to the musicians play. Our sesquicentennial parade will need people to march, floats and bike riders. Get your neighbors together and build a float.

Maybe we could have "professions" floats with teachers, doctors, artists, farmers, small business owners, each making their own float! Let your imagination loose! There will be a bike decorating contest using recycled materials. Look around your house or use items from the Restore and show us your creativity! Save some energy for the evening contradance. Throughout the day, the Silent Auction will raise money for the Signpost. Bid high and bid often! Enter your photos in the Photo Contest. There will be many more activities for your enjoyment. Come share in the surprises.

For parade information call Hobie Guion, 223-1808; Silent Auction call Jane Burroughs, 229-2107; running race call Mark or Sue Stephen, 223-6256; other information call Rachel Senechal, 223-0539.

A special feature that we are working on is a group photo of ALL East Montpelier residents who are able to be at the Elementary School at 11:00 am on Saturday. What a great way to preserve the sesquicentennial on film!

Y2K - ARE YOU READY?

Computers are an essential part of our transportation, power, food distribution and banking networks. Everything from cars and coffee makers to nuclear power plants and oil rigs rely on tiny computers called microprocessors. Unless you light your house with candles, heat with wood, grow your own food, get around on horseback and keep all of your money in your mattress, you depend on these microprocessors.

Some of these will fail on or around January 1st, 2000. Nobody knows how many or which ones will fail. Businesses, government agencies and individuals are working hard to test each computer and microprocessor and to replace the faulty ones. But there is not enough time left to test and replace all of them.

It's quite possible that all of the most important computers will function smoothly, and that most of us will hardly notice any problem. It's also possible that there will be bigger problems and that the supply of gasoline, electricity, food, water and heating fuel that we rely on will be interrupted - for hours, days, even weeks. Why not prepare for the worst while hoping for the best?

Do you have a wood stove? Do you have plenty of fire wood? If you do and the power goes out, can you take someone in who doesn't? If you don't, do you know where you can go? How much food do you have stored in your house? Do you rely on an electric pump for water? If East Montpelier residents begin to organize now, we can be prepared for whatever might happen. People can prepare themselves and their families and be prepared to help their neighbors. We can all know ahead of time who will need help in an emergency. At least one neighborhood in town has already begun to do this. If you would like to learn more or to help organize, please come to an informational meeting at the Four Corners Schoolhouse on Sunday, July 11th at 7:00 p. m., or call Jim Grundy at 476-5680.

WASHINGTON COUNTY FIELD DAYS QUILT SHOW AND CONTEST

Area quilters are invited to participate in the 1999 Washington County Field Days Quilt Show and Contest. Field Days will be held July 9, 10 and 11 at Parker Field on Route 2 near East Montpelier village.

There will be six contest classes: tied baby and youth size quilts, quilted baby and youth sized quilts, tied twin and larger quilts, quilted twin and larger quilts, tied wall hangings and quilted wall hangings. Judging will occur before the quilt show.

If you are in the process of creating a quilt or wall hanging or have made one within the past two years (completed after July 1, 1997), here's an opportunity to show off your handiwork. For more information, contact Anne Ormsbee at 223-5372 or Judy Fowler at 454-7823 (evenings).

EVER WONDER WHO SETTLED EAST MONTPELIER?

Would it surprise you to know that several direct descendants are still living in our town? Early East Montpelier, an original three-act play by Marilyn Blackwell, Ellen Hill and Johanna Nichols, first performed in July of 1976, will be staged once again by the town's Sesquicentennial Committee on September 24 and 25.

Come out and join the production team and cast members for a play reading at the Four Corners Schoolhouse on Monday, July 12, at 7:00 pm. Sign up for an unfilled role or a backstage job — or just to hear what it is all about. No acting or production experience needed — just enthusiasm.

For more information call Maurice Cerutti at 454-1720 or Alban Richey at 454-7862.

STEVE AND LAURIE JUSTIS - MANY VENTURES, MANY GAINS

by John S. Hall

Steve and Laurie Justis have done what few if any of us could ever dream of achieving. As the old saying goes they've "made a silk purse out of a sow's ear." How? By taking an eight acre, seemingly worthless piece of land and generating a potpourri of income producing endeavors.

Steve, born and raised a Virginia farm boy, graduated from Virginia Tech. with an MA degree in plant pathology. He moved to Vermont and married Laurie Watson some nineteen years ago. Laurie had graduated from UVM with a BS in animal science. Steve says, "Laurie has an eye for property". She found what is now their home in East Montpelier Center, a story and a half house with acreage. If you're driving east through "The Center" and don't have a cell phone clamped to one ear by your cocked shoulder and are not eating a foot long sub with salad oil dripping off your elbow, you'll be able to see their place on the left just as you leave the pavement. It's really best if you have both hands on the wheel because there is usually a BIG pothole at the transition from pavement to gravel. (Actually, Mike and his road crew do a good job of keeping such places smooth, however, it's a never ending battle). Steve tells me they've had at least one vehicle jump off the road at that very spot, landing on the stone wall by their house.

Along with their home, Steve and Laurie purchased nearly eight acres of marginal pasture which surrounds the house. When they bought the property, at best the land could most descriptively be called WET; caused mainly by road run-off directed onto their property, as well as the fact the land is located at the bottom of a long gradual slope. When I visited them for information to write this article, soft spoken Steve remarked, "Water just sheeted across this place". Laurie added, "When I first walked the property in some parts of the field, the water was over my boots".

With the help of a diversion ditch and some subsurface tiling, the land started to change and over time it became productive. Steve, employed for twenty-four years by the VT Department of Agriculture as a marketing specialist, had a number of ideas how to generate income from their land. He offered, "I love my work which entails helping people to improve the quality of their life. Quality of life to me mainly means improving income". Therefore, he and Laurie set out to be an example of what can be accomplished on land that, prior to their owning it, was a wet, "run-out" pasture.

Steve started by establishing and growing trees to resell for landscaping, such as Norway maples and Japanese birch. He has enough tilled land to grow 1200 mums he buys each spring as rooted cuttings. By August these plants are ready to be transplanted into pots using composted horse manure for soil. He wholesales about half of his crop and sells the remainder at their home. He also has enough land to grow a patch of miniature pumpkins (the Jack-Be-Little variety) which he sells through his brother-in-law. Laurie adds, "Steve loves to have his hands in soil". I would add he seems to have a knack for making things grow. The old timers called it "a green thumb".

Laurie in no way stands idly by as she also has her projects that produce income. They have built a six stall horse barn, and she usually boards up to four horses that graze on their property. Laurie laughs, "We have a little competition here between grazing vs. growing".

They have also built a small dog kennel with grassed yards placed under a sweeping shade tree. Laurie uses the kennel to board dogs, usually for people who want to go away for the weekend. Her plan is to eventually be trained to groom dogs after she chooses to no longer work full time. She is now employed at the VT Office of Child Support. However, Laurie is best known in the agricultural community as having worked as a milk inspector and later in the Ag. Testing lab in Waterbury. I first met Laurie about twenty years ago when she came to our farm as a Vermont State milk inspector. It was then that I realized such people don't have to be cranky old men who delight in writing long lists of MUST DO orders, but instead can be pleasant and smile as is Laurie's usual demeanor.

Through Steve's efforts, they have added a number of attractive landscaping features to their property such as stone walls, a cedar hedge plus plantings of a large variety of various evergreens and deciduous trees. He has even found room for a few apple trees. One of his specialties in the Vermont Dept. of Agriculture is helping apple orchardists.

As you can see, the Justises lead busy lives centered mostly around their work and home where they used their land to improve the quality of their lives. They also have enjoyed being the representatives for the E.F. Au Pair service out of Cambridge, MA. Through this service of interviewing families in need of a resident au pair, they have met many young people from foreign lands who have enriched their lives.

John S. Hall is a partner in Fairmont Farms. He and his wife Donna live on Putnam Road. John also enjoys writing as well as farming.
